“The Epidemic Diseases in Cuba”

Enrique Beldarraín Chaple, MD, PhD

Chief of Research Department, National Information Center of Medical Sciences; Professor of Public Health and History of Medicine, National School of Public Health, Havana, Cuba

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 18, 2016
10:00AM - 11:30AM
Lecture | Reception to Follow
Tosteson Medical Education Center, Room 227

Dr. Beldarrain is Chief of the Research Department at the National Information Center of Medical Sciences and a Professor of Public Health and the History of Medicine at the National School of Public Health. He has over 50 professional publications (books, articles, etc.) as well as major research grants (e.g., from the David Rockefeller Center at Harvard University) and has received prestigious Cuban awards for both his publications and his contributions to the development of the Cuban public health system. His international activities have included lectures, expert consultations, field work, visiting professorships, and the like in Puerto Rico, Spain, Angola, Costa Rica, Mexico, Canada, Brazil, and the U.S. (at such universities as Harvard, Yale, and Brown). He has been awarded a 2016 Fellowship to serve as a Visiting Scholar at Brown University. He has published about the History of Cuban Epidemics Diseases, Tuberculosis and Hansen Diseases in Cuba.

RSVP by Monday, November 14, 2016: https://www.surveymonkey.com/r/ZXRXGH3

Questions? Contact Nancy Kaufman at nancy_kaufman@hms.harvard.edu or 617-432-1037

In collaboration with:
Edward A. Kravitz, PhD, George Packer Berry Professor of Neurobiology
Caroline Palavicino-Maggio, PhD, Research Fellow in Neurobiology

Achieving Excellence Through Diversity - Advancing Equity and Social Justice