Digital technologies have transformed how people globally communicate, socialize, learn, work, and increasingly intersect with the healthcare system. From Health Information Technologies (HIT), to wireless gateways and connectivity, biosensors and wearable personal technology, to precision medicine, mHealth, and Artificial Intelligence (AI), these are just a few of the ways 21st century technologies are making our lives better, moving health care toward a patient-centric model. Providers and stakeholders are using digital health to reduce inefficiencies, improve access, reduce cost, and increase quality. Patients and consumers can use digital health to better manage and track their health and wellness related activities.

What lies ahead for health and health care in an era of such rapid healthcare disruption? Will medicine and patients of the future be much different from today due to the development of modern digital technology and mobile devices? Can we expect a transformation of medical practice from the population-based approach treating illness to individualized medicine while genome and digital technologies drive such transformation.

During our Annual Health Equity Symposium, panelists will share how innovative digital tools can improve health, health care, and a rapidly changing healthcare system. Additionally, we will elaborate ways in which providers, payers, and policymakers engage individuals, families, and communities to maximize opportunities to close disparity gaps and influence health equity with digital health technologies.

There are four learning objectives for participants symposium:

1. Understand their role in leveraging digital health technologies to eliminate disparities.
2. Identify cultural, environmental, and social issues that must be addressed in an era of digital health.
3. Define opportunities and challenges for policy implementation.
4. Articulate areas for study and research exploring the use of digital technologies to close disparity gaps and influence health equity.

Making the most out of each hour of your day is a constant challenge; people and technology compete relentlessly for our attention and it can feel like too much to do and not enough time to do it. Although you can’t get more hours in the day, you can take control of your focus to decide what to do and when to do it. In this highly participative, high energy, practice based workshop, participants learn the fundamentals of time management: understanding the value of your most important tasks, eliminating time wasters, and using proven time techniques to get the most significant results in your day.

Seize the moment with new time and focus habits and an action plan for immediate use.

There are three learning objectives for participants:

- Evaluate your current focus and use of time to improve your productivity by minimizing low-value activities.
- Mindfully plan each day’s activities using your chosen prioritization technique and scheduling system.
- Apply proven productivity habits to leverage your time and focus for maximum impact to your performance.
